The Breakdown of a Moral Order
Jelmer Vos

"Exhaustively documented and carefully argued, this is a Kongo-centered view of how the country entered into the Portuguese domains, but also how its elite guided that entrance with their own agenda. An insightful view of the onset of colonialism in Central Africa."
—John K. Thornton, Boston University

Jelmer Vos is an assistant professor of history at Old Dominion University.

A richly documented history of the arrival of rubber traders, new Christian missionaries, and the Portuguese colonial state in the Kongo realm, told from the perspective of the kingdom's inhabitants. A case study of colonialism in Africa from economic, religious, and political perspectives, it examines the participation of African elites in colonial rule.
Ghana Studies is the journal of the Ghana Studies Association, which strives to provide a forum for cutting edge original research about Ghana's society, culture, environment and history. All of Ghana Studies' scholarly articles are peer-reviewed with an editorial team based in both North America and Ghana. Since its first issue in 1998, Ghana Studies has published significant work by leading scholars based in Ghana, the US, Canada, and Europe.
